

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURES

A part or all of nodes, which form a network where information is propagated through data transfers between the nodes, are capable of managing propagation history (data source
5 and data destination) information in their own node for data relayed by each node, and restoring all of the data propagation history by combining a part or all of the history information dispersed in the nodes.

10